Hi, Naomi,

I've double-checked with Alyson and wanted to make sure before proceeding further that we're all on the same page.

Alyson's intention with the original agreement was that we would give NWAV $500, and that for that amount we would be able to have our logo placed on the conference tote bag and get an insert in the registration packet and an opportunity to email attendees. Her intention wasn't that we'd pay production costs for the tote bags themselves.

Let us know your thoughts. Apart from limiting the spending to $500, it doesn't matter whether it goes towards a flash drive, tote bag, or something else. Were you thinking of doing a print-on-demand program for people who wanted one? That's something I've been considering with regard to the Annual Meeting Handbook.

Cheers

David

Dear Alyson,

We talked some months back about LSA's involvement in the annual NWAV conference. I've been trying to collect opinions about that from a range of people and hope to be able to be back to you soon with a summary.

Meanwhile, I just wanted to check in to confirm that the LSA is still planning to contribute totebags for the conference this October. A group of students is working on figuring out what sort of conference packet (or digital packet substitute) to offer. They are hoping to hand out less paper to most attendees. In the event that they succeed in working out how to do that (making totebags unnecessary), would the LSA be interested in contributing something else? Partial cost of USB keys with the LSA and NWAV logos on them (and likely other sponsors' as well) containing the conference program, abstract booklet, etc.? Or reusable water bottles or travel mugs?

Also, we now have our CFP and website up and running at:

<http://linguistics.utoronto.ca/nwav44/>

We'd like to post it in the LSA's conference list. I'm emailing Rita Lewis to check how we do that, but I'll just ask you, too, while I'm thinking of it.

Thanks,
Naomi
